

Edward Roy

Born in Grady Hospital Atlanta, Georgia on a windy day in March of 1945 to Erma L. Hill; a loving single mother. This spoiled child learns at an early age how to use America's wicked racial policies for his own advantage. Raised in Harlem, he escapes the rabid call of its streets guided by a determined mother who refused to allow the streets to consume him. Mentored by Malcolm X and others, he graduates high school, enlists in the US Army's Medical Corps, graduates college with the help of his mother's celebrated Number Business. Now, an author and retired from corporate America, he is married for fifty-three years to Dale P. Galiber-Hill with two children and nine grandchildren.

He says, "I no longer play numbers on 115th Street, now I play numbers on Wall Street."
